

Options for Adult Primary Care

Three different kinds of doctors provide primary care to adults.

1. Internal medicine – these doctors provide care only to adults.
2. Family medicine – these doctors provide care to people of all ages.
3. Internal medicine / pediatrics (also known as med-peds) – these doctors also take care of people of all ages, but have a little more training in the needs of kids compared to family medicine.

Some nurse practitioners and physician assistants also provide primary care, usually in a primary care office that also has doctors in it.

There is no “perfect” specialty for primary care for adults. Some people like to see a med-peds person because they know more about kids than family medicine or internal medicine. But, sometimes it makes more sense to have a primary care provider close to where you live or close to where you work or one that has other services in the same building. Maybe you have other things you consider important. That’s ok. We just want to provide you with options to continue to get the health care you need as an adult.

The list here has SOME options grouped by region of Columbus and then groups each kind of specialty together, in case the specialty of the doctor is important to you. We also have links to the websites for the clinics, so you can look up additional information for yourself. Please be aware that not every doctor is taking on new patients. You may find when you call the office that they cannot schedule new patients at the time you call. That means you will have to try a different office.

We have put a ** symbol next to the offices that take at least some forms of Medicaid insurance, like Caresource, Molina, and Buckeye Health Plan. Please double-check before you schedule to make sure the office takes your particular insurance.

There are more options available than are on this list. If you’d like to see more options, you can check the hospital websites below:
