What is the Guide to Education Programs for Out-of-School Youth?

The Guide to Education Programs for Out-of-School Youth is a resource guide containing helpful hints and descriptions of organizations, programs, and services for out-of-school youth who are looking to reconnect to education. This guide provides information on more than 50 programs that provide high school diplomas, literacy instruction, GED preparation, and other services; the guide also includes additional resources and websites about social support services and postsecondary college opportunities.

Please keep in mind that the descriptions do not include all information and resources available. While we have tried to provide as complete a list as possible, programs do change from year to year. To receive the most complete and up-to-date information, we strongly urge you to contact individual programs with the phone numbers, fax numbers, and email addresses provided. Also note: our intention is not to support or advocate for the specific professional agencies and programs listed in this guide. Inclusion does not imply our endorsement, nor does absence imply our disapproval. If you know of a program that serves out-of-school youth that was not included in this program guide, please let us know how we can reach the director of the program so we can include these programs in future guides.

Who can benefit from using this guide?

- Youth who have dropped out of school or who have graduated, but need additional educational support
- Parents, guardians, and other family members of out-of-school youth
- Youth development practitioners
- Out-of-school youth advocates
- Youth-serving organizations
- Literacy agencies
- School personnel and other educators

How do I use this guide?

This guide is organized in two ways. After this FAQ's section, there is a chart which summarizes all of the programs listed in this guide by the services they offer, when they offer them, their requirements, and their location. If you know what kind of program you are interested in joining, you can use this chart to see which programs might work best for you. The chart will direct you to the page where each program is described in this guide. If you are not sure what kind of program you are looking for, a list of brief explanations the various types of program is given after this chart. Read through these descriptions to see which section of the guide you might want to read. These sections then provide brief explanations of the different kinds of opportunities that exist in Philadelphia.

How do I join a program that I find in this guide?

Start early and call ahead – being accepted into a program requires that you coordinate a wide variety of activities, from calling ahead to filling out applications. Some of these take time – don't get discouraged if you can't start classes right away in the program you like best. The most important step to getting started is calling programs and setting up an appointment to go speak with people about their program.

What if I didn't get admitted into the program I like best or the program is full?

Some programs have long waiting lists or admit students through a lottery system; some have minimum requirements of youth, such as a certain number of high school credits or an age limit. If you are not admitted into the program you like, check out some other programs and call them right away. There may be more than one program that can help you meet your goals, so don't get discouraged if you need to call more than one program before beginning.

Description of Program Types (Multiple Pathways)

There are many different types of programs and services available to out-of-school youth who would like to build their skills, prepare for the workforce, or get a high school degree. The following are brief descriptions of the different groups of programs presented in this guide. If you know exactly what you are looking for in a program, the chart of programs may be useful for you; if you are not sure exactly what you want, reading these descriptions may help you to decide which section of this guide to look at first.

Educational Options Program

This is a diploma-granting program that is offered at 10 public high schools from 3:00 pm – 6:00 pm Monday through Thursday during the school year. Students must have 8 high school credits and be at least 17 years old in order to enroll. Students can earn up to two credits every 9-week quarter.

Dual Enrollment

Gateway to College has partnered with the Community College of Philadelphia to offer a special year-round program to eligible 16-20 year olds who have dropped out of school. Students who are accepted into the program earn credits towards an associate degree or certificate while earning their high school diploma. Students must be able to read and write at an 8th grade level and must be able to finish their high school degree by the age of 22.

Accelerated High Schools

These are alternative high schools for out-of-school youth who are over-age and under-credited. Accelerated schools are very similar to charter schools, using innovative teaching strategies to engage students in ways that traditional high schools may not. These schools enroll students with as few as 0 credits and they are designed to provide individualized, year-round instruction.

Charter High Schools

These high schools are similar to public high schools in that they almost always have the same hours during the day, run on a school year (no summer classes), and usually offer grades 9-12; they are also similar to accelerated high schools in that they have considerable flexibility in how their teachers work with students to improve their educational achievements. These schools are each unique, so it is difficult to summarize them; if you are looking for an alternative high school setting, you may want to look at the charter schools offered in the city.

Re-enrolling in Traditional High School

Out-of-school youth who would like to return to a neighborhood or citywide high school can do so until their 22nd birthday. If this is the way you would like to reconnect and you have questions about how to go about re-enrolling with the School District of Philadelphia, check out this section for answers to frequently asked questions about getting transcripts, transferring schools, and other related issues.

The GED

For students who, for any reason, do not want to attend classes but still want a high school degree, the GED might be a reasonable option. Students who are 18 or older (or 16 and 17 in some special cases) can take the GED test and if they pass, are awarded a high school degree. There are many programs around Philadelphia that offer classes and study guides to help future test-takers prepare in order to successfully pass the exam.

Programs run by Community-Based Organizations

A large number of the programs listed in this guide are run by community-based organizations (CBO). These programs offer a variety of services, including literacy instruction, GED classes, adult basic education, and social support services. Most CBO-run programs do not offer programs that lead to a high school degree.

Literacy Centers & Resources

For students who are struggling to obtain their goals because they have difficulty with reading and writing, there are a number of programs and resources designed specifically to work with low-literacy youth and adults to bring these skills up to a more functional level.

Educational Options Program (EOP)

The EOP (which used to be the Twilight Schools) is an alternative academic program offered by the School District of Philadelphia. The program runs in the late afternoon, generally from 3:00 pm until 6:00 pm on Monday – Thursday during the school year. Students take two classes each quarter and earn credits towards a high school diploma.

What You Need to Know:

- Students must be 17 to enroll in an EOP, though there is no upper age limit.
- Students must have at least 8 credits in order to enroll in an EOP
- Students in EOP earn one credit per course successfully completed. For courses that students have previously taken a class at a high school but did not pass, students earn the credit in one 9-week quarter at EOP; for courses that a student has not taken at a high school, students must complete two 9-week quarters to earn credit for the course.

Further Information:

EOP is run by the School District of Philadelphia's Office of Secondary Education.

Dual Enrollment

A small group of youth in Philadelphia who are trying to reconnect to educational options may qualify for a unique dual enrollment opportunity. One program, Gateway to College, allows qualifying out-of-school youth to earn credits towards their high school diploma while earning credits towards an associate's degree at the Community College of Philadelphia at the same time.

What You Need to Know:

- There are strict admissions requirements for this program:
 - students must be between the ages of 17 and 21;
 - students must already have at least 13 high school credits; and
 - students must demonstrate literacy at the 8th grade level or higher
- There are a limited number of spots open. Students must apply for one of these slots, demonstrate that they meet all of the entry requirements, and go through an admissions process that involves an interview. The program only accepts students who demonstrate high motivation to succeed.

Gateway to College

Community College of Philadelphia
1700 Spring Garden Street, Room M1-24, Philadelphia, PA 19130
Telephone: (215) 751-8540
Email: gateway@ccp.edu
Website: <http://www.ccp.edu/site/gateway/index.html>

Services offered: Diploma and college credits. Gateway to College is an educational alternative for out-of-school youth who may not have had success in other learning environments. What makes Gateway to College truly unique is that students will not only have a second chance to earn a high school diploma, but Gateway participants also earn college credits toward an associate's degree or certificate.

Accelerated High Schools

There are a number of high schools in Philadelphia that are specifically designed for students who have not succeeded in the city's traditional high schools but who would still like to earn their high school diploma. There are four accelerated high schools, which enroll students who are at least 17 years old and have less than 8 credits; the faculty and staff at these schools work with students to speed up their achievement to keep them on track.

What you need to know:

- All of these schools have their own admissions processes – students are not guaranteed a spot in the school.
- Also, slots in these programs are in high demand and fill up quickly. The accelerated high schools have long waiting lists and unfortunately cannot take every student who contacts them looking to enroll.

Charter High Schools

Another type of nontraditional high school experience is offered by charter schools, which do not have to follow all of the same guidelines as the traditional public schools. Hope Charter School and Youth Build are two charter schools in Philadelphia that offer high school enrollment to youth who have left traditional high school and would like to reconnect to a high school outside of the School District's traditional options. There is also an option for students who are interested in being educated at home via the internet through Achievement House Charter School.

What you need to know:

- All of these schools have their own admissions processes – students are not guaranteed a spot in the school.
- Also, slots in these programs are in high demand and fill up quickly. Please contact individual programs to find out whether they have spots open.

Achievement House Charter School

Re-enrolling in Traditional High School

Although some youth may not want to return to the school that they left, there is the option of returning to a traditional high school in Philadelphia.

What you need to know:

- Any student who is not yet 22 years old has the LEGAL RIGHT to be enrolled in a public high school in the School District of Philadelphia unless they have been validly expelled.
- If a student or parent/guardian has been told that the student cannot go back to high school, please contact the School District of Philadelphia's Multiple Pathways Office at (215) 400-6700. This office will work with the student, parent/guardian, and the school to get the student re-enrolled.

Frequently Asked Questions:

Here are the answers to some questions you may have about re-enrolling, transferring schools, and obtaining a transcript.

Re-enrolling in School

Where do students re-enroll in daytime classes?

Students must go back to their neighborhood high school or the school they last attended.

What if the student has since moved to a different part of the city?

The student should go to his or her neighborhood school of current residency. To find out which school is the student's neighborhood school, go to <https://sdp-webprod.phila.k12.pa.us/OnlineDirectory/Directory> and click on the list of regional offices at the bottom and call the office for more information.

What documents does a student need to re-enroll?

Documents that can be required include the ones listed below.

- Proof of residency in the school district. Acceptable documentation includes a utility bill, rental lease, or bank account showing the residential address of the child's parent or guardian
- Proof of the child's age (examples of acceptable documentation include a birth certificate, baptismal certificate or transcript of the record of baptism duly certified and showing the date of birth, notarized statement from the parents indicating the date of birth, duly attested transcript of the birth certificate, or duly certified transcript of birth)
- Official medical records of immunization or assurance from a former school district or a medical office that the required immunizations have been done (or a required series begun) with a record to be sent as soon as possible. Immunization shall not be required for any child if a physician provides a written statement that immunization may be detrimental to the health of the child.
- Completion of a "Parent Registration Statement" about whether the student was or is presently suspended or expelled from any public or private school.

What documents can the school district not require to re-enroll?

The documents and information listed above are all that the school district can demand to enroll a student. The district cannot require the following documents:

- The child's Social Security number
- Picture identification
- The child's visa or immigration documents
- The Juvenile Court Order placing the child or other court records
- Guardianship papers
- The reason why the child was removed from his or her birth family

Can a student re-enroll by him/herself or does a parent or a guardian have to be present?

A student must be accompanied by a parent or a guardian except in the following circumstances:

- The student is 18 or older.
- The student is an emancipated minor (a person under 18 years of age who is married; or is self-supporting and has established an independent household; or has been officially declared an emancipated minor by the courts)

How long does it take for a student to get enrolled?

The time it takes between completing the necessary paperwork and when the student can start their first day of school varies by school. Some schools will be able to complete the enrollment process on the spot and some other schools will take several days. The district recommends that a student be enrolled and in attendance within 10 business days of the school district's receipt of the necessary enrollment documents.

How does enrollment work for a student who has a special circumstance – such as a child living in foster care?

Students whose birth parents live outside of the Philadelphia School District but whose foster parents live in the district have the right to attend school in the district and to be treated as if they were residents of the district for all purposes.

What about a student living 'gratis' with relatives or family members?

When a child whose birth parents live outside of the Philadelphia School District is living 'gratis' with a relative or family friend in the district, the child can attend school in the district if the following conditions are met: the child is living with the relative/friend continuously and not just for the school term and the relative/friend is willing to assume all personal obligations for the child related to school requirements. The public school may require the relative/friend to file appropriate legal documentation (such as court orders) to show dependency or guardianship or a sworn statement that relative/guardian meets the requirements of "gratis" guardianship (such as utility bills, employment verification and other information verifying the adult's residence and responsibility for the child).

What about a student returning from incarceration/confinement?

The School District of Philadelphia supports a program for students returning from confinement called RETI-WRAP (Re-Entry Transition Initiative –Welcome Return Assessment Process). RETI-WRAP is a 10-day assessment program for all students returning from court-ordered delinquent placement. This program is a collaborative effort between the School District, Family Court, Department of Human Services, Behavioral Health, and many other outside partners. For more information contact:

William Penn High School
Room 245
1334 N. Broad St., Philadelphia, PA 19122
Contact person: Khary Moody

What about a student who is homeless?

The law defines a homeless individual as "one who lacks a fixed, regular and adequate nighttime residence and/or who has a primary nighttime residence that is a short-term or transitional shelter, or a place not designed for / or ordinarily used as regular sleeping accommodation for human beings." Homeless children and youth may be with their family members or on their own (unaccompanied). An unaccompanied homeless youth does not need a parent to enroll him or her in school.

To the extent feasible, the homeless student should remain in the school of origin, except when doing so is contrary to the wishes of the student's parent or guardian. When a family becomes homeless during or between school years, they may elect to remain at their current school through the duration of homelessness.

The documentation normally required for enrollment (i.e. proof of address and proof of immunizations) are superseded. The student must be immediately placed on roll and school staff is required to assist the family in obtaining the necessary documentation.

Youth who are homeless are afforded certain rights and protections under federal law, and the school district has established the Homeless Children's Initiative to support homeless students and make it easier for them to attend school. For more information contact:

What if a student has a complaint with a school related to enrollment?

The student should report the issue to the regional school office. To find the student's regional office, go to <https://sdp-webprod.phila.k12.pa.us/OnlineDirectory/Directory> and click on the list of regional offices. If the problem is still not resolved, the student or parent can report their grievance to the Office of School Management. (See the end of this section for more information about pursuing a grievance).

School Transfers

Under what conditions can a student be transferred out of his/her school?

A student may be transferred if:

- 1) The student is a victim of a documented violent crime,
- 2) The student's school has been officially identified as "persistently dangerous,"
- 3) The school has academic problems and has not made adequate yearly progress (or AYP) for two years in a row, or
- 4) For other, various reasons (see below).

How do I pursue a transfer for a student who is a victim of a violent crime?

The violence must have happened on school grounds or on a school bus or at a school sponsored event. The incident must have been reported to the police and to school officials. An application for an Extenuating Circumstances Transfer Request (form EH-36E) must be completed and can be obtained from a regional school office (go to <https://sdp-webprod.phila.k12.pa.us/OnlineDirectory/Directory> for the phone numbers for the regional offices) or from the Office of Student Placement at 215-400-4290. The signature of the student's parent or guardian is mandatory unless the student is legally independent (see above for definition). The transfer requests are reviewed case by case. The district has discretion in deciding which school a student will be transferred to; if a student or parent requests a specific school, the district may not grant their request. The District must transfer the student within 10 calendar days of receiving the application. If necessary, a student/parent can request a meeting with the Office of Student Placement.

How do I pursue a transfer for a student attending an officially designated persistently dangerous school (PDS)?

When a school has a high incidence of reported violent crimes and is officially identified as persistently dangerous, the school must notify parents/caregivers within 10 days about being on the list and their option to transfer their child(ren). (For the list of PDS schools, go to <http://www.pde.state.pa.us> and click on the K-12 Schools tab at the top, then Student Services on the left hand side, and then Dangerous Schools on the left hand side). Students can transfer at any time while the school is on the PDS list. The District must grant the transfer within 30 calendar days after the transfer application is submitted. For more information, contact the regional school office or the Office of Student Placement at 215-400-4290.

How do I pursue a transfer for a student attending a poorly performing school?

Schools that don't make adequate yearly progress (or AYP) for two consecutive years must notify parents/caregivers about the school's status and their option to transfer their child(ren). (For the list of schools that do not make AYP go to <http://www.paayp.com> and click on State Report and then Academic Achievement Report). Schools that don't make AYP for two years in a row must notify parents/caregivers before the next school year begins. The District mails materials to student's homes and holds information sessions in the second half of the school year about the impact of the AYP status and details about transferring. Transfers are granted in the summer and students start at their new school in the fall. The District provides

Literacy Centers and Resources

For youth who are struggling with reading and writing, there are a number of programs in Philadelphia devoted specifically to raising literacy skills.

What You Need to Know:

- Many literacy programs do not carry credits toward a high school degree. However, skills gained in these programs are necessary for success in programs that lead to a degree or for passing the GED test.
- Increasing literacy skills takes commitment – for students to really see improvement, they must attend their classes on a regular basis and continue to work on their skills outside the classroom.
- Not all of these programs serve only out-of-school youth; if you know somebody who is struggling to read and/or write, please contact individual programs to see if they can help.

How You Can Help

Parents:

- Make sure that your children know how much school performance matters to you, and to their futures.
- If your children display dropout risk factors, bring that information to the attention of school officials and relevant social service agencies.
- Make a difference by volunteering to help the School District contact young people who are on the verge of dropping out.
- Call 1-877-TURN-180 or visit www.projectturn.net for advice and referrals that can bring needed support for your children or others at-risk of dropping out; and
- Make sure you let elected and appointed officials know that resolving the dropout crisis must be a top priority.

Young People:

- Help us understand what might be done to keep students from dropping out.
- Learn about the economic benefits of getting your diploma, and talk to your friends about why they should stay in school.
- When you learn about programs that work for you, share that information with your friends and bring them along next time.
